

Risk Acceptance Memo — Gemini Free-Tier AI Processing

Product	Inbox Buddy (email-inbox-copilot)
Operating entity	Wright AI Solutions LLC
Date	2026-09-23
Prepared by	Thomas Wright

1. The risk being accepted

Inbox Buddy sends the sender, subject line, and short preview snippet of each processed email to Google's Gemini API for AI summarization and spam classification. As of this memo's date, this integration uses Gemini's standard, no-cost API tier.

Under Google's published terms for that tier, Google may use content submitted through it to improve its own products. This differs from Google's paid tiers, which carry a contractual no-training commitment. Wright AI Solutions LLC has not entered into a separate Data Processing Agreement (DPA) with Google covering this use.

This means: sender, subject, and snippet data from any connected mailbox — including personal data belonging to third parties (the senders of that mail, who are not users of this product and have not agreed to anything) — passes through a vendor pipeline with no contractual assurance against retention or reuse beyond the underlying processing itself.

2. Why this is being accepted rather than fixed now

Inbox Buddy's customer base, as of this memo, is general small-business partners of Wright AI Solutions LLC — not a confirmed regulated-professional customer (law, health, financial services) with confirmed confidentiality or privilege obligations attaching to their mailbox content. Moving to a paid, no-training Gemini tier ahead of any such customer being onboarded would add an ongoing operating cost with no corresponding reduction in risk for the product's actual current use.

This is a deliberate sequencing decision, not an oversight: the underlying gap is real, tracked, and its resolution is scoped to a specific, concrete trigger rather than an indefinite deferral.

3. Scope of acceptance

This acceptance covers general small-business use of Inbox Buddy where no connected mailbox is known or reasonably suspected to carry legally privileged, medical, financial-account, or otherwise professionally-confidential correspondence as a routine matter of the account holder's business.

This acceptance does not extend to any account or partner where that condition is not met. The Privacy Policy (content/legal.ts, Section 3) already discloses this risk directly to every user and states they should not rely on the Service for confidential or privileged email until this changes.

4. Trigger for revisiting this decision

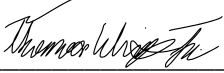

This risk acceptance must be revisited, and this memo reissued or revoked, upon any of the following:

- Onboarding, or receiving a request to onboard, any partner who indicates their mailbox routinely handles legally privileged, medical, or financial-account information (e.g., a law firm, healthcare provider, financial advisor, or accountant).
- A material change to Gemini's free-tier terms of service regarding data use or retention.
- A decision to actively market or sell Inbox Buddy to regulated-industry customers.
- Any indication that a specific connected mailbox is, in practice, processing the kind of sensitive correspondence described above, regardless of the account holder's stated business type.

Upon any of the above, this acceptance no longer applies and the product should move to a paid, no-training Gemini tier with a signed DPA — or the affected account should be excluded from AI processing — before continuing to process that mailbox's content.

5. Acceptance

By signing below, I confirm I have the authority to accept this risk on behalf of Wright AI Solutions LLC, and that I accept it on the terms and scope described above.
